Call for submissions: Henrik Enderlein Prize awarded for outstanding research on the future of Europe

The fifth Franco-German research prize will be given to exceptional scholars aged 40 or younger whose work contributes to solving the future challenges of Europe. The prize honours excellent European research that contributes to the future of Europe.

Berlin, 21 January 2026. European Union scholars are again invited to submit their works from the social sciences for the Henrik Enderlein Prize. The research prize in honour of the Hertie School's late President is aimed at young researchers aged 40 or younger whose work demonstrates scholarly excellence and a practical contribution to public debate on the future of Europe. It is endowed with 10,000 euros in total and was first awarded in 2022. Applications will be accepted until 20 March 2026. For more information on the submission process, please visit the Henrik Enderlein Prize webpage.

The Henrik Enderlein Prize is jointly awarded by the Hertie School, Sciences Po, the German Federal Foreign Office and the French Ministry for Europe and Foreign Affairs. This year's winner will be recognised during a festive event in Berlin this summer. Enderlein, who passed away in 2022, was a graduate of Sciences Po and the founding director of the Jacques Delors Centre.

Past winners of the prize include international relations and environmental scholar Alice Vadrot (University of Vienna); economist Stefanie Stantcheva (Harvard University); political scientist Tarik Abou-Chadi (University of Oxford); legal scholar Vladislava Stoyanova (Lund University); political economist and sociologist Alexandros Kentikelenis (Bocconi University); and political scientist Filip Kostelka (European University Institute).

Award highlighting the impact of academic research

"The Henrik Enderlein Prize is being awarded for the fifth time this year, honouring research that connects politics and civil society in Europe. By continuing this tradition, we commemorate the late President of the Hertie School, Henrik Enderlein, who was committed to a strong, peaceful and forward-looking Europe," says Cornelia Woll, Professor of International Political Economy and President of the Hertie School.

About the Hertie School

For over 20 years, the Hertie School has been teaching, researching, and debating good governance and public affairs in the heart of Berlin and Europe. The social science university offers master's degrees, doctoral programmes, and executive education to train change-makers in government, business, and civil society. True to its motto "Understand today. Shape tomorrow." the university conducts interdisciplinary research, provides international and practice-oriented education, and serves as a forum for public debate. Six Centres of Competence strengthen its expertise in European affairs, international security, fundamental rights, sustainability, digital governance, and data science. The Hertie School was founded in 2004 by the non-profit Hertie Foundation and has been
