TRAVEL WITHIN THE EUROPEAN UNION

Travellers currently do not have to provide a reason for travel within the European Union, but they may need to provide a negative test result and/or self-isolate on arrival.

From 1 July, the health pass will be recognized for travel within the European space and will take the form of a European certificate.

The certificate could include proof of vaccination, a negative test administered less than 72 hours prior to departure or proof of recovery from COVID-19 less than three months prior to departure. Countries could also establish additional health measures if they are necessary and proportionate (tests, quarantines, etc.).
